

The population of Indonesia is 245,452,739, but that is divided up by an archipelago. The climate of Indonesia is very tropical. It has the second largest rain forest in the world. Being a tropical country helps produce their natural resources which are, petroleum, tin, natural gas, nickel, timber, copper, fertile soil, coal, gold and silver.

The capital of Indonesia is Jakarta. It is very unique country. In the Indonesia the western influences are McDonald's is open 24 hours, country music, and R&B to slow Rock. Also, with those western influences, brought many different languages, the main language is bahasa but there are 725 different languages.

Fun facts:

- 1.Indonesia lies along the Ring of Fire.
- 2.The national animal is the Komodo dragon.
- 3.Indonesia was formerly known as Dutch East Indies.

Culture diffusion in Indonesia is everywhere around the country. First of all, the western influence is evident in all areas of Indonesia. For example, McDonald's is open 24 hours a day. Also people listen to country, R&B and slow rock music. The Indonesian people also intake more meat into their typical meals. Next, their religion originated from different areas of the world. It originated in the late 1200s -1300s, as Islamic merchants from Arabia and East Africa. That is the cultural diffusion of Indonesia.

The physical environment in Indonesia affects trade patterns in so many ways. First of all, Indonesia has many oil reserves. Their ground produces oil that they trade with countries like the United States. So the physical environment affects trade patterns by increasing their oil productions which also increases their economy patterns.

The physical environment in Indonesia affects their economy in many ways. First of all, the oil production brings in more money that they use to produce more oil reserves. Since their physical environment produces oil they trade with other countries like the United States which also increases their economy.